MISS MOLLIE BURDETT, of Haynesville, a town in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, was in the habit of reading story-papers after going to bed. A few nights ago she retired as usual to read, having placed an oil-lamp on a stand the head of the bed. It is supposed she read until she fell asleep, leaving the lamp burning, subsequently upsetting it and setting fire to the bed-elothes. The fire spread so rapidly that the building was in a few minutes enveloped, rendering escape from Miss Burdett's room on the upper floor impossible. Several desperate attempts were made to rescue the poor girl, but all failed. Just before the roof fell a piercing cry was heard, and a white figure was seen standing at the window of the room occupied by the unfortunate

New Mechanical Telephone.

A mechanical telephone has been invented by a son of Mr. Henry A. House, of Bridgeport, and a patent applied for. The inventor is a lad only 13 years old. The telephone works without battery or magnets, and the call from one station to another is heard distinctly at some distance from the receiving point. Thus a person in the room where the instrument is located can hear a message from the transmitting point without placing his ear to the instrument. The invention is a very simple one, but its effects are quite wonderful, and the instrument seems to answer a great want in telephonic communication—the power of attracting attention at the receiving point without the aid of electric callbells or other methods outside of the telephone itself. The instrument is simply a square box, in four sides of which are set round pieces of sheetbrass about three or four inches in diameter. Wires fastened to the centers vented by a son of Mr. Henry A. House, ameter. Wires fastened to the centers J. of these plates meet at the center of the box, and are there "bridled" with the main conducting wire, leading to similar instruments at other stations. A mouth-piece, like that of a speaking tube, is fastened to one side of the box, and the voice through this is reproduced at the other stations with sufficient L. Backus, Manager of 11th Ward, N.O. force, as we have said, to be heard at quite a distance from the instrument. A duite a distance from the instrument. A brass-wire is used, and at angles where it is necessary to fasten it no insulators are required. It can be run through a hole in a simple wooden fastening. The instrument works best, we understand, waen the connecting wire is stretched tolerably tight. For short lines it will undoubtedly work admirably. One experiment in Bridgeport has caused some amusement. A box is placed in a tree, and painted about the color of the wood of the tree. The experimenter in an B. H. D. Money, D.
